When is it good to burn wood? WoodLots reports on supplying and using wood fuel in the South East

I have recently had the pleasure of meeting a number of people who are passionate about wood fuel production and automated wood fuel heating systems. They recognise the potential for wood fuel to improve the lot of woodland management activity in the UK and have (perhaps most significantly) taken the risk of investing in this emerging industry to provide virtually carbon neutral heat.

Over and over again I hear these pioneers say 'just go and see an automated wood fuel system in action'. And speaking from experience, seeing a system is certainly the best way of understanding how straightforward, clean and feasible wood fuel heating is.

You can read about opportunities to visit various installations and participate in wood fuel training within this issue - take a look at our Wood Fuel feature, pages 6-7, plus useful websites and contacts on page 8.

Please contact me with your comments and your own wood fuel stories and help get the simple facts out there - burning wood from sustainable local sources is very good for woodlands, for people and for the planet.

Enterprising Advice & Training

WoodNet has successfully secured LEADER+ funding from the Wealden & Rother Rural partnership to pilot a new training programme and advice service at the Woodland Enterprise Centre

This welcome funding has enabled the development of the WoodNet Outreach, Advice & Training Programme and Training Room at the WEC, Flimwell. Woodland owners, contractors, timber suppliers and students will be offered training and advice on supplying wood fuel and timber for architecture, whilst designers, construction professionals, planners, etc will be assisted with information on the use of local wood products. Education materials will also be developed on the sustainable and renewable qualities of local timber for fuel, manufacturing and construction.

Richard Smith, newly appointed WoodNet Outreach & Advice Officer, will be offering free visits to woodlands throughout the Wealden & Rother Rural area. In particular he will advise on identifying timber potential, especially for the production and processing of woodchip for automated heating systems and the supply of timber for the construction industry.

In the coming months WoodNet will develop and deliver a range of training and information modules to help both landowners and contractors to add value so that more local timber can make it into the market place. Details of the following training and information modules will be announced in the next issue of WoodLots (Issue 67, May):

Above: The 20 hectares of semi-natural ancient woodland surrounding the Centre provide a living classroom for woodland and timber training; the award winning gridshell building and forthcoming workshop development provide inspiring examples of joinery and construction using local timbers; the wood fuelled heating system demonstrates the use of local woodchip for renewable secure heat supply. See more at www.woodnet.org.uk/wec.

- Production & Marketing of Timber for Construction;
- Production & Marketing of Woodchip for Wood Fuel;
- Tree Identification for Timber Production;
- Understanding the Renewable Qualities of Wood.

Project partners, Plumpton College, have supplied essential classroom furniture and equipment for the new WoodNet Training Room and recruited Colin Pantrey, Forestry & Arboricultural lecturer to be based at the Woodland Enterprise Centre for 2 days a week.

Plumpton College will continue to offer forestry & arboriculture full time and short courses (1st Diploma at Level 2 to Foundation Degree at Level 4) to be delivered from the Flimwell site, enabling students from the East of the region to access training. In particular Colin will be delivering a Forestry & Conservation BTEC for 14-16 year olds commencing in September 2007.

If you are interested in holding your own training event or developing an activity in partnership with WoodNet at the Woodland Enterprise Centre please contact: Jenny Martin, 01580 879552, email: jenny@woodnet.org.uk.

To find out more about the WoodNet Outreach, Advice & Training Programme, meet the training and advisory team and see the training facilities, come along to the free Open Day at the Woodland Enterprise Centre on Saturday March 24th (details page 12).

Outreach & Advice Officer: Richard Smith

Richard comes to the WoodNet team with extensive experience gained from many years working in forestry and agriculture. Richard will visit woodlands to assess the potential for supplying wood fuel and architectural components. Vistis are free to woodlands within the WARR area. You can meet Richard between 1pm & 3pm at the Woodland Enterprise Centre Open Day (free) on Saturday 24th March (see page 12). To book a WoodNet Outreach Visit please contact WoodNet on: 01580 879552, leaving your name, contact phone number and postcode on the answerphone.

Colin Pantrey, Lecturer in Forestry & Arboriculture Plumpton College

Colin will be based at the Woodland Enterprise Centre for 2 days a week. Look out for forthcoming short courses in Coppicing (4 days), Home Chainsaw Use (1 day) or Understanding Ancient Woodlands (1 day). Colin and his team will be demonstrating timber extraction, forwarding, winching, sawmilling and woodchipping for wood fuel at the Woodland Enterprise Centre Open Day (free) on Saturday 24th March. Colin will be available from 3-4pm to discuss forthcoming Plumpton College courses at the Flimwell site, including the BTEC for 14-16 year olds. See page 12 for more info about the Open Day.

Wood Fuel Snippets

Using wood for heating provides a potential economic incentive to manage woodlands and thus provide sustainable land management for this important habitat. With rising gas and oil prices wood is now the cheapest heating fuel in the UK (www.naturallight.org.uk).

A modern wood fuelled boiler is efficient and clean burning. The current price of fuel-grade wood chip is about 2.4p per kilowatt hour, whilst oil is about 3.7p and gas is about 3.6p. Add to this the fact that wood is a carbon neutral fuel and wood heating becomes a very attractive option. (www.bioenergy.org)

Studies have shown that local wood, when combusted in modern automated systems, is as clean as natural gas. When wood is sourced from local coppiced woodlands cut on a sustainable cycle there is a 'negative' carbon footprint. In addition to the carbon neutrality of the cut coppice, additional carbon is locked up within the extensive root system of the coppice stool. (Dr Sam Langridge, Energy Consultant)

When Burning Wood is Good

The concepts of climate change, fuel security and carbon foot-printing have recently become firmly entrenched in our popular consciousness. Our impact on the planet is regularly discussed over a pint or across the dinner table. Disaster scenarios and renewable solutions are often debated in the media, but rarely is wood fuel mentioned as a readily available carbon neutral fuel.

Fundamental misconceptions about burning wood are a significant barrier to the development of the wood fuel industry in Britain. Yet wood from a sustainable local source, with just the transport and processing cost in carbon, releases a tenth of the CO₂ compared with oil and a seventh compared with mains gas (XCO₂ Conisbee Ltd).

Wood is often perceived as a dirty, cumbersome fuel. Few people realise that modern automated systems running on wood chip are clean and elegant. The technology is available and proven. With appropriate system management, the end user can simply adjust a typical thermostat and enjoy carbon-neutral heat at the flick of a switch.

Getting the message across to the general public and decision makers alike that it is ok, when woodland is managed properly, to cut down trees and burn wood is a challenge to the forestry industry. Whilst we are justifiably passionate about the unnecessary destruction of trees and woodlands, this noble attitude can get in the way of recognising wood as a resource with the capacity to supply clean, renewable heating and hot water.

The emergence of wood as a viable fuel source in the UK is at the 'teething' stage. There are problems to be solved - public image, chip standardisation, quality control, consistency of supply and storage. However, none of these problems are insurmountable - as shown in countries such as Austria and Sweden, where an efficient wood heating infrastructure has been established for many years. In Sweden 34% of domestic heating is wood fuelled (www.bioenergy.org).

In the UK there are numerous individuals, businesses and organisations that are pioneering the establishment of wood fuel as a mainstream supplier of heat. Grants are available and the number of installed automated wood fuel systems is increasing all the time generating a new income stream for sustainable woodland management.

Top down: Robin Thorpe, whilst researching for a replacement for the oil-fired boiler at 7 Sisters Country Park, was delighted to see John Leigh-Pemberton's recently installed 150kw automated wood fired boiler in action; occasional removal of ash, only 4 bags a year, a useful bi-product for the garden.

Seeing is Believing:

John Leigh-Pemberton's perception of wood fuelled heating altered dramatically on a study tour to Austria where he saw 'sophisticated technology, working impeccably with a healthy wood fuel economy'.

John has since installed a 150KW automated system at Great Higham Farm on the North Downs in Kent. His confidence in the technology is such that he did not install an expensive back up system. The system quietly and efficiently provides heat and hot water for a 5 bedroom house, a 16 bed thatched barn, two 3 bedroomed houses, two 2 bedroomed houses and a heated swimming pool. The system will be expanded in due course to incorporate office space, washing and changing room facilities.

John has developed his own supply of wood chip from 20 acres of local coppiced sweet chestnut on a 15 year cycle. He is currently trying out various chippers before investing in his own and is considering supplying quality wood chip to other users.

The heating development at Great Higham Farm won the Biomass: Commercial Development category in the South East Renewable Energy Awards 2006.

Visit Great Higham Farm: If you are interested in viewing this award winning automated heating system or finding out about John's experience of supplying wood chip for wood fuel, John Leigh-Pemberton has very kindly offered WoodLots readers the opportunity to visit Great Higham Farm and the nearby coppice woodlands on the afternoon of Thursday March 29th from 3pm to 5pm, refreshments provided. Please contact Jenny Martin at WoodNet to secure your place(s).
Tel: 01580 879552 Email: jenny@woodnet.org.uk.

'Today's woodchip heating boilers are fully automated, over 80% efficient and need minimal servicing. Only a small quantity of ash is left and being high in potash, it can be used as a fertiliser.' Nick Sandford, SEEDA Champion for Wood Fuel 2006-07.

'Biomass energy is renewable energy obtained from plant products. It includes fuel from trees (wood fuel), which can be derived from wood, branches, leaves or needles...Burning of wood fuel from sustainably managed forests for energy production does not contribute to CO2 emissions as the gas released through combustion will be absorbed by new tree growth....woodland owners can benefit from the developing markets for wood fuel... income streams generated [can] help owners deliver environmental and social benefits from their woods to society...' 'Renewable energy & wood as a fuel', www.woodland-trust.org.uk
