Local Timber Producers Group: A meeting for producers and contractors in the Wealden and Rural Rother area on Friday 26th September at WEC, Flimwell. For further details see page 4.

Welcome to the Autumn edition of WoodLots. One of the main events this Autumn is this year's Weald Woodfair which will take place at Bentley Wildlife & Motor Museum between the 12th-14th September 2008.

A large number of WoodLots contributors and advertisers will be there:

- Ben Law is launching his new book: The Woodland Year at the fair and will be signing copies each day on the stand of his publisher Permanent Publications.
- Chris Jankiewicz is from the Forestry Commission and works alongside SEEDA to offer funding advice for the forestry sector. He has contributed an article to this issue and will be running a drop-in advice clinic at the Wood fair on Friday the 12th to promote the RDPE and SEWTF grant schemes. Please see pages 10-11 for further details of these schemes.

We will have a stand at the Woodfair again this year where you will be able to meet us and to pick up information about WoodNet and the training courses we run.

Also don't forget our Producers Group meeting for local timber producers, landowners or contractors which takes place on the 26th of September at WEC, Flimwell. For further details see page 4.

FINNISH INSPIRATION FOR TIMBERBUILD TRAINING

Finland has a long tradition of timber building, and these skills are being kept up to date at Helsinki University of Technology where their "Wood Program" has over the past decade provided an inspiring experience for students interested in exploring the possibilities of innovative timber design.

WoodNet has been in contact with the architects and teachers involved in this exciting initiative, and have invited some of the leading lecturers, and recent students, to visit Flimwell to share their ideas on timber design and experiences of how this has been informed their architecture practice.

A symposium, and accompanying exhibition of the outcomes from the past ten years, is being planned, to be held at Flimwell towards the end of this year. Discussions will focus on how use of timber can be better incorporated into architectural training in UK.

If you are interested in attending or contributing to the symposium, please get in touch to register your interest. Further details will be sent out once dates / speakers have been finalised.

Local Timber Producers Group

As a result of the WoodNet Liaison group meeting earlier this year WoodNet have developed a plan to create a local timber Producer Group. This group will focus on activities which aim to add value to timber produce.

The next meeting will be held on the 26th September at WEC Flimwell and will be facilitated by Chris Yarrow from Wilderness Wood.

This day is free of charge and open to any contractors, landowners, or buyers who are interested in developing the group, attending training courses or supporting local produce.

Please register in advance – contact David Saunders on: 01580 879552 or email: info@woodnet.org.uk

Free Special Trees Conference

Oliver Rackham, renowned woodland historian and ecologist, is the guest speaker for the Special Trees and Woods Project's third annual conference. Professor Rackham is an engaging speaker who can find clues in every tree, hedge and wood to unlock the past secrets of the countryside.

Professor Rackham is well known for his book "The History of the Countryside" in which he writes that he has "yet to see a convincing sawpit"! This proves how special the Chiltern woodlands are – one of their most common heritage features – the sawpit, are nationally rare.

Volunteers working on this project, which is funded by the Heritage Lottery Fund, will also share their experiences of researching special woods.

Make sure you book early to confirm your place on 22nd November in Hemel Hempstead.

For more information go to www.chilternsonb.org/special or call 01844 355 525.

A Week In The Woods

The Sustainability Centre at East Meon, near Petersfield in Hampshire is running a course to provide an introduction to Coppicing and Woodland Crafts from the 22nd to the 26th of September. It will feature a series of workshops on Coppicing, Hurdle Making and Woodland Management.

Participants in the course will be able to apply for a full 3 year apprenticeship in Coppice and greenwood crafts.

If you are interested in booking a place on this course, or if you would like more information about the apprenticeship, please go to www.greenwoodcentre.org.uk, call Fran Fowkes at the Green Wood Centre on 01952 432769.

Thermal Tree Assessment

Back in the dark ages of human medicine, doctors amputated limbs without pain relief and treated people using leeches. So the discoveries of anaesthesia and antibiotics were landmarks in medical history, revolutionising patient care.

Arboriculture is about to experience a similar revolution in professional tree care with the introduction of thermal imaging as a physiological assessment tool.

Thermal imaging technology provides arborists with the first ever positive, proactive tree assessment technique for really informed tree care.

THIS IS NOT JUST ANOTHER DECAY DETECTION DEVICE!

True tree care requires positive, responsible management practices that consider the reactive growth processes of trees and acknowledge that trees have an adaptive life cycle measured in decades and centuries.

Thermal imaging is an ideal tool for assessing the current physiological health of trees. It offers a combination of quick and easy data-recording and clear colour photographs that provide a visual interpretation of a tree's physiological function and enable the identification of decay and dysfunction.

Bat Surveys

Finding bat roosts in trees is a challenging task at the best of times and numerous experts have been thwarted, even when radio tracking tagged bats to a particular location. A tree may be considered to offer high value opportunities as roosting habitat, and bats have been observed foraging around its canopy, but it can still be a considerable challenge to confirm the presence or absence of a roost site.

The low light levels at dusk and dawn make visual observations difficult, and the pitch black of night prevent any accurate sightings. It is virtually impossible to tell whether a tree is a roost or just a foraging site. Thermal imaging overcomes these hurdles by transforming the heat generated by bats into visible images. Bats can then be observed leaving their tree roost sites and their activities recorded with still photographs or video images.

Grants & Funding

There are a number of new grant schemes available to support forestry and rural activities or businesses which aim to add value to timber produce.

Below Chris Jankiewicz explains the distinctions between a number of SEEDA-funded grants and to the right we feature Biowoodlands, a local business that has recently received grant support to purchase machinery.

The Rural Development Programme for England (RDPE) is a new source of funding from the EU and Defra that is available to farmers, growers and foresters. The grants are administered by South East England Development Agency (SEEDA) who has about £60 million available for the period 2008 to 2013. For further details please see:

www.seeda.co.uk/rdpe.

The funding will cover a wide range of activities such as farm diversification, adding value to woodland products, tourism activities, renewable energy projects and collaborating to develop new products and services.

For the forestry sector RDPE offers up to 50% grants for capital investment. Eligible activities include:

- timber harvesting or processing
- production of wood fuels
- training to increase skills and profitability
- development of wood fuel or timber supply chains.

As part of the Programme SEEDA has awarded £27 million to a number of Leader Local Action Groups (LAG) across the region. Each LAG will receive delegated funding of between £1.6 million and £2.6 million for the life of the programme. It is these local groups who will decide where their share of the money goes, to ensure it fits local priorities and will generally be dealing with projects that require grant up to a maximum of £50,000.

For larger projects SEEDA will handle these directly and where they are related to forestry or woodfuel they will be handled in close co-operation with the Forestry Commission.

The South East Woodland and Timber Fund (SEWTF) is a separate but complementary funding stream provided by SEEDA and administered by the Forestry Commission. The aim of the SEWTF is to encourage woodland management through strengthening the timber supply chain. The fund can support the types of activity listed below and it can also be used to help applicants with small-scale projects that are not eligible under RDPE.

- investment in processing equipment
- work based training
- marketing and promotion of the use of timber
- market research to widen the use of timber in the region
- training in business and marketing skills

For further information please read the details on the SEEDA and Forestry Commission web sites or contact the programme staff shown in the section opposite for further guidance.

Funding Case Study

The South East Woodland and Timber Fund (SEWTF) was started to encourage the management of the South-East's woodland. It aims to do this through the development of markets for local timber products and through support for the local supply chain. This includes support for activities such as small scale timber processing projects, especially those that aim to add value to an existing resource such as Chestnut coppice.

A good case study of this scheme in action is provided by Nick Raeside of Biowoodlands. He has recently set up a specialised mobile sawmilling operation to supply the demand from local timber manufacturing companies for prepared chestnut strips. The startup for this project involved capital costs for the initial purchase of the specialist machinery required. This was partly supported both by the SEWTF grant scheme and a High Weald AONB grant from their Sustainable Development Fund.

Although Chestnut is widespread within the South East its architectural and structural uses have traditionally been limited because older trees are prone to ring shake and twist. Local companies such as Inwood Developments now produce structural grade timber from small diameter sawlogs including coppice and conifer thinnings. This is done by jointing short lengths of chestnut strips which have had any knots and defects removed, and then laminating them so that the structural weaknesses of the source timber are avoided.

The grant to Biowoodlands financed the purchase of a custom twin bladed 'double slabber' saw which quickly regularises round saw logs. This aids the milling process as the timber can then be quickly and accurately sawn into the thin strips needed for supply to manufacturers.

This approach to the selection and processing of the sawlogs means that timber that would otherwise be too small or have too much bend for conventional milling or for post and rail can now be used. It creates a new market for a widespread but currently under-used resource and means that lower grades of timber can be processed to realise greater economic value.

The Biowoodlands project identifies and fills a gap in the production process and supply chain by milling small diameter timber into strips either on site or in the yard. Previously some of the round timber involved in the supply chain has been transported out of the region to be milled into strips and then returned to be manufactured into a finished product. The ability to mill a proportion of the timber within the region thus has obvious environmental and cost benefits in terms of reduced handling and road miles.

Processing timber in this way is a means of adding value to an existing resource and, as a new market for areas of standing timber; it also has the potential to increase their value for landowners. In this way it also fulfils an overall aim of the SEWTF funding by providing an economic incentive for the more active management of underutilised timber resources within the South-East.

The 'double slabber' saw squaring off timber as the first part of the milling process at the Biowoodlands timber yard. Photo courtesy Nick Raeside

If you have standing chestnut coppice to sell, Biowoodlands requires timber of between 6" to 10" and upwards (150mm – 250mm); FSC preferred. This equates to stands of coppice of up to 25 or 30 years. Biowoodlands is committed to the sustainable management and utilisation of woodland and can provide consultancy on continuous cover forestry.
